SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

THE GARDENS IN EASTER WEEK.

A NEW HONORARY MEMBER.

Professor G. H. Carpenter proposed the election of Professor J. Arthur Thomson, of the University of Aberdeen, as an honorary member. He said that no one had done more for scological science than Professor Thomson, and they were particularly indebted to him for his inspiring writings. they were particularly indebted to him for his inspiring writings.

Mr. L. E. Steele seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted.

The Chairman announced that the gentleman who had won the special bronze medal for photography, Mr. S. Amphlet, of Walsall, England, was unable to attend their meeting, and the medal would, therefore, be forwarded to him.

ELECTION OF COUNCIL.

The Chairman announced that the result of the ballot for the Council of the Society for 1917 was as follows:—President, Sir Frederick Moore; Vice-Presidenta, Sir R. H. Woods, M.D., M. F. Headlam, James Inglis, Sir C. A. K. Ball, Bart., M.D., and L. E. Steele. Secretary. Professor G. H. Carpenter. Treasurer—H. Francis Stephens. Ordinary members, Professor J. B. Butier, Col. Claude Cane, Dr McDowel Cograve, Professor A. F. Dixon, J. E. Geoghegan, Chas. Green, Lieut.-Col. W. E. Johnstone, T. K. Laidlaw, Dr. E. R. Leeper, Anthony Maude, Professor A. E. Meitam, A. Miller, Dr. J. O'Carroll, Professor J. A. Scott, Colonel Sir Frederick Shaw, Bart.

Sir Frederick Moore, on taking the chair on his election as President, was received with loud applause. He expressed his thanks to the members for the honour bestowed on him, and recalled that he had been twenty years a member of the Council. His fresh honour would, if possible, stimulate him to further efforts on behalf of the Society. Much, however, depended on the members and on roccasion had

COURSING.

In connection with the use of honey as a food it is pointed out that anyone who lives near parks or fields could keep one or more hives of bees, and thus increase the food supply. Where isle of Wight disease breaks out in bees the importation of Dutch bees is recommended. Mesans. Chivers and Sons, Ltd., the well-known fruit growers and jam manufacturers, of Histon, near Cambridge; whose record as one of the largest bee farmers in the country has often been referred to, possessed, four years ago, 556 hives, and produced as much as 114 tons of honey in a single year. Unfortunately, the Isle of Wight disease came into the district, and readually the stocks were reduced to half-adozen. Then three swarms of Dutch bees were obtained. The bees have proved most prolific. In three years these stocks, with the few English left, had increased to 156 hives, and the produce of honey last year averaged 183 pounds per hive during the season. Two hives of Dutch bees gave the extraordinary yield of 254 pounds, in average of 427, which, so far as can be ascertained, is a record for a single hive. At six-sence a pound this would represent a financial return of £21 7s. for the two hives alone.

Old Seldier's Fierole Act.—A lad named Byrne, residing at Harold's Cross Cettages, fell through the ice as he was trying to cross the canal near his home. He was unable, owing to numbness, to grasp a lifebuoy that was thrown to him by one of an excited crowd. Ultimately Bandeman Byrne, aged about 60 years, of the Royal Dublin Fusiliers, procured a short ladder and went to the assistance of the boy. The ice gave way, and the bandsman had considerable difficulty in effecting the rescue, the water being about 12 feet deep. The rescued and rescuer were removed in the Rathmines ambulance. The brave conduct of Bandsman Byrne was warmly commended.

Germany's Lost Colonies.

Mr. Walter Long's speech in London yesterday contained a statement of the first importance. In the Allies' reply to President Wilson's peace Note, in which they defined in outline their war aims, no mention was made of the fate of the German Colonies Now the Colonial Secretary, "speaking with knowledge and full responsibility' on the subject of the German Colonies of which we have acquired possession since which would be "contrary to all experi-the war began, makes good that omission." Between those two Colonies would ever return to German Empire would not tolerate anything of the less—in the past. These men, says kind." This sufficiently emphatic state- Mr. Russell, have the "genius for ment represents, we must assume, the considered policy of the Government after full consultation with the Dominion Governments and with the Allied Governments whose forces have assisted in the conquest of the German Colonies. It means the extinction of the Colonial Empire which Germany acquired by trickery and threats, maintained by merciless oppression and exploitation of the natives, and developed for the chief purpose of utilising its constituents as aids to the pur-CLEANED OR suit of her design of world-domination. He has expressed the hope that Ireland will till Fatherland." We wonder that he did not put the latter first. It is the final condemnation of Germany's Colonial policy that she prostituted even Christianity to the interests of kultur. Let us recall some of the manifestations of kultur in Germany's Colonies. In South-West Africa it took the form of a brutal oppression which produced the Herrero rebellion. In the Cameroons it was responsible for the atrocities, perpetrated on the natives by the retreating German troops, which were described in General Cunliffe's despatch. It is a fact by no means without significance that no single one of the German Colonies before the war was paying its own way; all alike were a charge, and a heavy charge, on the Imperial Exchequer. The explanation, of course, is that the Germans did not possess the colonising genius of the British or French, and had no such exalted conception of a Colonial policy. It would be absurd to deny that almost all European Powers have treated their subject races badly at one time or another; but at least it may be said that Great Britain and France have made it heir aim to develop their African posnot for their own benefit. What was the exception in their case was the rule in Germany's. Her consistent aim was the exploitation of the African territories and their peoples in her own interest. To her 'the white man's burden" meant nothing; her Colonies were either places where the white man could profit by imposing burdens on the black man or, like South-West Africa, strategic points unashamedly threatening her neighbours' possessions. The interests of the natives and the security of the Allies' Colonies alike require the end of Germany's Colonial Empire. Its annexation will add nearly a million square miles to the Allies' territory, and of this vast area the lion's share will l'sing-tao is at Japan's disposal. French forces assisted in the conquest of Togoland, and French and Belgian in the conquest of the Cameroons. A large part, perhaps the whole, of these areas will pass to our Allies, and Belgian territory may possibly be extended also from the Congo into East Africa, where the Belgian contingent has taken a notable share in the campaign. But Germany's possessions in the Pacific will pass unchallenged to up to the prescribed strength. Three notethe Australasian Covernments which con- worthy factors brought about the decision

The Tillage Scheme.

The Royal Dublin Society's deputation exprised the Department of Agrical ture in an admirable spirit yesterday, and Mr. T. W. Russell and his colleagues met it frankly and fairly. The result was a discussion which threw a good deal of light on the tillage scheme, and, as we think, will improve its prospects of success. The deputation on several important points. Its first question required, and received, information on several important points. Its first question of the time-limit for exemptions till the 25th March—a date after which ploughing and sowing for the present year will be impossible. If this provision is not to the unit from which he was taken. If he adds to his physical qualities and his lodders of arable land must know their that long before the 25th March. The of all eligible holdings by practical and competent men. Mr. Russell replied that very great influence" in attack as well as the inspectors are already at work, that their reports will be submitted "very soon," and that final judgment will be given by the Department and its Advisory Committee. In other words, there will be a court of appeal from the decisions of the inspectors. In this matter excessive zeal would do quite as much harm as excessive slackness. The man who ought to plough must be com-pelled to plough, but the man who can serve his country better by producing beef or mutton or by breeding horses ought not to be disturbed. Mr. Russell assured the deputation that there will be no rash interference with the interests of the cattle-trade. In reply to Captain Greer, he said that, while stud farms are not exempt from the necessity of tillage, the genuine claims of the horse-breeding industry would be neither over-ruled nor injured. On the question of "driving the willing horse"-that is, of compelling the man who tilled last year to till more in the present year than the man who never tilled before-Mr. Russell made an interesting statement. The Department's case, briefly, is as follows: The men with holdings of less than ten acres are natural and necessary tillers. To expect tillage or any considerable scale from the owners of big grazing farms was to expect something "Let no man think," he said, "that these classes lies the large body of tenant farmers who hold from ten to one hundred acres, rule. That is impossible. Our Overseas and have done some tillage-more or tillage," and he thinks that they are labouring under no sense of injustice. The State has provided that they shall get good prices for their produce. In any case, it is, he believes, a matter of sheer necessity. The menace of the German submarines increasing. "We must have the food," and these farmers are the only people who have the skill and means to produce it in adequate quantities. Mr. Russell left on the Royal Dublin Society's deputation an impression-which we hope sincerely that events will justifythat the Department intends to deal very firmly with any active or tacit resistance to its scheme. The full powers of the Defence of the Realm Regulation will be exercised in all necessary cases. Penalties will be inflicted without fear or favour, and "no skulker will escape." This is good news, "Colonial Mission evening" in an Evan-gelical, church in Berlin, Dr. Solf ex-the scheme must fail. The Board of Agreedure has been cepted the responsibility in the organisation of these supplies in England, and the Irish Department, by accepting the control of this tilings scheme, has accepted as similar responsibility in Ireland. We are sorry that Mr. Russell was not examined on this subject, vesterally, in addition to the 2,000,000 acres in 1917, in addition to the 2,000,000 acres which were under tilings last year. advocacy of the Loan.

I understand that the Committee lately appointed to advise the Minister of Agriculture on steps for increasing our food supplies is strongly in favour of the formation of agricultural battalions in the Army. The idea is that all men now going into the Army from the land and all such men already there, where available at home, should be collected, as far as possible into parts which would be as possible, into units which would give as possible, into units which would give assistance to the farmers in the urgent business of tilling the soil and raising crops. The services of such units, or sections of them, should, it is thought, be available wherever needed, which implies the existence, of course, of a mobile agricultural force. Dockers' battalions have already proved of great help in the business of transport. When upon loading and unloading work the men are paid at the ordinary rates, their Army pay being meanwhile suspended; and, presumably, similar conditions would apply to members of the agricultural battalions.

Speeches made by Ministers pointing out that there will have to be a forced Loan, if the present War Loan is not as successful as it ought to be, are having a result that is not altogether satisfactory. I hear of several poor people who are drawing small sums they have in the Post Office Savings Banks, because they think that the Government will seize the deposits. The absurdity of this should be made clear to the poor, for money in the Savings The absurdity of this should be made clear to the poor, for money in the Savings Banks is far more useful to the country than being kept in a drawer or cupboard. The real fact is that the poorer people of this country have not yet been touched by the War Loan campaign. Newspaper advertising does much, but further and more intimate measures should be taken to markable that this war, which began with a political assassination, has so far been marked by comparatively few of these crimes. At the moment I can only recall the cases of Rasputin, Count Stuergk, the Austrian Premier; Prince Yussuf Izz-ed-Din, the Turkish Heir Apparent; Marshal Von der Goltz (doubtful), and M. Jaurès. There may have been one or two more. The reason for this comparative immunity of distinguished persons may have been the extra precaution observed by the police of their respective countries, or, as I am rather inclined to think, the fact that the war has brought a new interest into the war has brought a new interest into the lives of the cranks who usually attack them, and has prevented them from dwell-ing upon their individual grievances to the

Addressing later another large audience in the Albert Hall, Mr. Balfour said it was in order that Europe might be free that we were fighting at this moment. Now, as in the past, the burden fell most heavily on us, and the Government needed that all our national resources should be thrown into the common pool. The sacrifices of the war were prodigious, of men, money and goodwill, and commercial connection, but the tremendous result was worth the sacrifice, if our object was attained. And that object? It was not merely peace. I suppore (said Mr. Balfour) that in this war-weary world, peace on some terms could be got to-morrow for the asking. But it is not the peace which is worth all we have sacrificed, and are sacrificing. The peace we want is a poace which shall be permanent, every hour of which shall not be disturbed by the fear that some adventurous politician or some greedy Power shall plunge the whole world into chaos. The peace we want is one which shall give every nation, great and small, the opportunity of bearing its share in the common duty of advancing civilisation and the cause of progress. The Loan, he believed, would be a full and overflowing success. The one obstacle, if obstacle there be, was the idea that the individual contributions were too petty to matter. We heard—perhaps, it was largely owing to the pressure of the British blockade—that our enemies had learned by necessity or by discipline that they must live on a narrower scale if they were to carry on the fight. "We are not less capable than they." declared Mr. Balfour, "of making sacrifices for our country. (Cheers.) We are not as yet—as yet—under compulsory force, such as they. Let us remember that in every direction in which we individually curtail personal expenditure, in that measure we add to the strength of the country; we bring peace nearer. In that measure, we put eurselves in a position to say that peace, when it comes, shall be a glorious peace and a lasting peace." (Cheers.)

BISHOP OF CORK.

Right Rev. Dr. Dowse, Bishop of Cork, proposed the toast of "The Prosperity of the Dominion of Canada." One had a great deal of gratification in wishing prosperity to Canada, because they knew quite well that prosperity had attended Canada in the past; it was attending her at present, and they felt sure that it would attend her in the future. (Applause.) In this old land, they sometimes suffered from excessive respectability, and they were sometimes inclined to think that the British Isles were the hub of the universe, and they wanted the mother country to speed up a little bit and get on the move. He could not help feeling that nothing would help them more to achieve that than for the sons of Canada to come back to the mother country for a while and mingle with them, and have an interchange of ideas. The spirit of a country, whether great or small, would always show itself on undertaking enterprises of difficulty when duty called, and the spirit of self-sacrifice and service which had been shown, especially since the outbreak of the war, by Canada encouraged them to predict for her a great future. (Applause.) These men had come cver to take part in the great and devastating war, and, having experienced something greater than they ever knew before, they would go back to make Canada greater and more prosperous still. (Applause.)

Major Campbell Stuart expressed the regret of Sir George Perley, representative of the Government of Canada, at his inability, owing to ill-health, to be there that day, and to respond officially to the toast so enthusiastically honoured. He was also in receipt of a cablegram from Mr. O'Doherty, who associated himself with their thanks to Cork for its kindly welcome and good wishes.

PARADE AND INSPECTION.

At the conclusion of the luncheon the Rangers formed into marching order, and, headed by the regimental band, proceeded to the South Mall, where they were inspected by Major-General Doren, C.B., Commanding the South of Ireland; the Earl of Bandon, K.P., H.M.L., and the Lord Mayor. Both sides of the Mall were thronged with citizens auxious to see the Irish-Canadians, and so great was the crowd that two cordons of military had to keep the roadway clear. The windows of the residences and offices, the steps leading to them, and every elevated point, even of the roofs of many of the buildings, were packed with sight-seers, many of them with miniature Union Jacks. As the battelion marched into position opposite the saluting base it was enthusiastically cheered. As the inspection was being made the bearing of the men was admired by the spectators, and as the regiment marched past on its way to barracks the scenes of enthusiasm were renewed.

DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT'S MESSAGE.

At the conclusion of the enjoyable concert in the City Hall last night, Colonel O'Donohue returned thanks to the citizens for the splendid reception accorded to the battalion, and mentioned that Lord Bandon had wired to the wonderful reception of the regiment in Cork. Har Boyal Highness, in a reply to Lord Bandon's message, said:

I tank you very much for so kindly informing the reception of splendid reception my Irish-Cragadian Regiment has received in Cork."

(Applause.)

The visit of the battalion closes to-day with a visit to Limerick.

THANKS TO LORD MAYOR OF BELFAST.

The following letter has been received by the Lord Mayor of Belfast (Councillor James Johnston) from Lieutenant-Colonel O'Donchue, Officer Commanding the Irish-Canadian in the City Hall on January 29th to meet the Colonel and officers of the Duchess of Connaught's Own Irish-Canadian Rangers. I am very sorry that it is impossible for me to be present, as I cannot be absent from the Admiralty owing to my urgent public duties. I am sure that the Irish-Canadian Rangers will meet with a very hearty reception in Belfast, and I hope that they will have a very successful tour in Ulster, where, I am confident, they will be everywhere welcomed.—Yours sincerely, "EDWARD CARSON."

PARENT TYRES RELAPSE SMARTLY,
TEXTILES DULL. DUBLIN, Wednesday Evening.

There was nothing very striking in the way of price movements on the Dublin Stock Exchange to-day, but some interesting changes were established. There was a decided act-lack in prices of Parent Tyre Shares on sales to secure profits out of the recent uniterrupted advance. Toxitles were easier in some cases. Support was forthcoming for Breweries and Dubliferies usually quoted in this market. Guinness Ord, opened $\frac{1}{2}$ highers at $2\frac{1}{2}$, Mesterday those shares were reported sellera when in reality the market was firmer, though mone changed hands. The absence of official closing prices, when they can be easily given in the official list, is a great drawback to business on the Dublin Stock (Schange, but there is little use, apparently, in spotesting against the indifference displayed in his respect by the members of the Erchange.
